We are nearing the end of this busy earnings season, with 89% of the total S&P 500 index members having released their third-quarter 2016 results through Nov 9. Results have improved considerably from the previous quarters and are expected to end up in the positive territory after five consecutive quarters of earnings decline for the S&P 500 index.

Per our latest Earnings Outlook report, combining the actual results from the 445 S&P 500 members with estimates from the soon-to-be-report 55 index members, overall Q3 earnings are expected to be up 3.3% on a 1.5% growth in revenues. The relative improvement in estimate revisions for the quarter is largely due to an improvement in the economy and rising oil prices.

Four of the 16 Zacks sectors are expected to witness an earnings decline in the quarter, with Oil/Energy, Transportation and Autos being the biggest drag.

The Business Services sector is looking reasonably healthy this quarter. For the sector, earnings are expected to grow 16.7%, while sales are touted to rise 8.7% over the last year. The projected improvement is majorly driven by the growing momentum in the economy as a whole and the job market during the quarter.

Let's see how things are shaping up for the two Business Services companies scheduled to report their results tomorrow.
